Psychological Warfare – UK Government Documents reveal how Brits have been manipulated into complying with Medical Fascism

The ordinary hard working people of the United Kingdom have been played. They have been manipulated and coerced into complying with medical fascism, thanks to the psychological warfare unleashed by the UK Government and its Scientific advisors every waking hour since March 2020.

The authorities weapons have included the television, the radio, the newspapers. But their most important weapon in ensuring the general public have complied with dictatorial tyranny and offered themselves up as lab rats in the largest experiment to ever be conducted in human history, is a weapon that everyone reading this will know personally. Because that weapon has been you.

To understand just how the authorities have managed to manipulate and coerce the British people into complying with medical fascism we must go back to March 2020. It was at this point that Boris Johnson had one simple instruction for the British people, that instruction being that “you must stay at home”. Stay at home in order to protect the NHS and save lives. This was sold to the British people by informing them that the authorities needed just “three weeks to flatten the curve”. But those three weeks turned into six weeks. Then those six weeks turned into twelve weeks. Then those twelve weeks turned into twelve months, and still to this day the freedoms that were taken for granted prior to March 2020 do not seem within reach.

But how on earth have they managed to get away with it? Well we only need to delve into government documents which are readily available to the public, if they know how to find them. The first document we discovered is titled ‘Options for increasing adherence to social distancing measures’ (https://assets.publishing.service.gov.uk/government/uploads/system/uploads/attachment_data/file/882722/25-options-for-increasing-adherence-to-social-distancing-measures-22032020.pdf) and was published on the 22nd March 2020, one day prior to the announcement that the British people “must stay at home”.

This is one of the problems they felt they has in persuading people to social distance –

A substantial number of people still do not feel sufficiently personally threatened; it could be that they are reassured by the low death rate.

They were quite right, and are still quite right to be reassured by the low death rate, as statistics show that just 0.2% of those who develop the alleged Covid-19 disease tragically die. And even then the vast majority who do die are over the age of 85 and also have underlying conditions.

But that wouldn’t help to create the illusion of a problem if they couldn’t get people to social distance so here’s what the behavioural insight team advised the UK Government to do in response to this problem –

The perceived level of personal threat needs to be increased among those who are complacent, using hard-hitting emotional messaging. To be effective this must also empower people by making clear the actions they can take to reduce the threat.

Persuasion

2. Perceived threat: A substantial number of people still do not feel sufficiently personally threatened; it could be that they are reassured by the low death rate in their demographic group (8), although levels of concern may be rising (9). Having a good understanding of the risk has been found to be positively associated with adoption of COVID-19 social distancing measures in Hong Kong (10). The perceived level of personal threat needs to be increased among those who are complacent, using hard-hitting emotional messaging. To be effective this must also empower people by making clear the actions they can take to reduce the threat (11).

‘Perceived’ is probably the most key word within that advice given to the UK Government on how to manipulate the British people. As this entire charade has been entirely about perception. If there was any level of personal threat then there would be no need to use hard hitting emotional messaging as people would already genuinely feel threatened. If there was truly something for the British people to be wary of then it would not need a mass media advertising campaign to make them aware of it.

But here’s an example of some of the ‘hard hitting emotional messaging’ used to manipulate the British people into complying with medical fascism –

Don’t kill granny with virus, warns Hancock

Health secretary blames new spike in Covid cases on middle-class youth

Young people have been urged by the health secretary not to “kill your gran” through spreading coronavirus after an increase in cases led to calls for mass testing of students.

Matt Hancock said that “affluent younger people” were behind a sudden rise in infections that has caught ministers by surprise and raised fears over the state of the university over the month

A further 2,948 confirmed cases of coronavirus were announced yesterday after 2,988 were reported on Sunday, a sharp rise from 1,813 on Saturday and up from a low of 350 daily cases in the middle of July.

Mr Hancock said that he was concerned by the imminent arrival of a million students at universities and revealed that data from the Joint Biosecurity Centre, due to be published this week, would show that the highest infection rates were in people aged between 17 and 21. While younger people were less likely to die, he said that infections would not stay in this age group. He warned: “Don’t kill your gran by catching coronavirus and then passing it on. And you can pass it on before you’ve had any symptoms at all.”

Student and lecturers’ leaders called for tougher action to keep students safe, including regular testing which is at present planned by very few universities. Fresh guidance for universities is due this week and government sources said that precautions already planned would be sufficient to get students back safely.

Jonathan Van-Tam, deputy chief medical officer for England, spoke last night of his “great concern” over the infection figures, saying that “people have relaxed too much” and that there was now a “general creeping geographic trend across the UK”. He warned: “If we are not careful we are going to have a bumpy ride over the next few “Don’t kill granny with the virus” warns Matt Hancock who blames spike in Covid cases on middle-class youth. This is just one example of many that have been used to increase the perceived level of personal threat.

But propaganda messages via the media weren’t enough on their own so that’s where the most vital weapon up the authorities sleeve came in – you. The ‘Options for increasing adherence to social distancing measures’ document has within it a section titled ‘Coercion’. No we’re not making it up, and this was one of the points made within that section –

Social disapproval from one’s community can play an important role in preventing anti-social behaviour or discouraging failure to enact pro-social behaviour, (therefore) consideration should be given to the use of social disapproval.

8. Social disapproval: Social disapproval from one’s community can play an important role in preventing anti-social behaviour or discouraging failure to enact pro-social behaviour (15). However, this needs to be carefully managed to avoid victimisation, scapegoating and misdirected criticism. It needs to be accompanied by clear messaging and promotion of strong collective identity. Consideration should be given to use of social disapproval but with a strong caveat around unwanted negative consequences.

Those who fell for the propaganda and lies broadcast on every mainstream TV channel and radio station, and published in every mainstream newspaper have been the glue that has kept the destruction of life as we knew it together. Because they have policed the introduction of medical fascism for the authorities, and they don’t even realise that they have and are being used.

The document lists every single tactic used to ensure the British people complied with the loss of their rights and freedoms and these have included –

- Using media to increase the sense of personal threat
- Using media to increase the sense of responsibility to others
- Using and promoting social approval for desired behaviors
- Using social disapproval for those who do not comply

The document explains in full how they have managed to manipulate and coerce the British public into complying with medical fascism using psychological warfare. But how exactly are authorities going to keep up this charade now that the “miraculous” experimental vaccines are being rolled out across the country? How are they going to ensure the British people continue to comply with medical fascism now that the most vulnerable to this alleged disease have been vaccinated?

Well another document found on the Government website helps us to find the answer to that. The document is titled ‘Behavioural and social considerations when reducing restrictions’ (https://assets.publishing.service.gov.uk/government/uploads/system/uploads/attachment_data/file/965089/s1099-spi-b-behavioural-social-considerations-when-reducing-restrictions.pdf) and was released on the 10th February 2021. A document which essentially confirms the writing is on the wall for a return to normality and that the introduction of vaccine passports (freedom passes) is inevitable.

One of the points made in the document describes the issues that may arise as some interventions are lifted. With complications on messaging due to “differences across tiers” and “immunity or vaccination certificates providing exemptions” for those who are vaccinated to carry out or take part in certain activities.

3. As complexity of messaging increases, helping people understand why specific behaviours are important and communicating their social value becomes more important [Moderate confidence]. As interventions are lifted, communication will shift from a relatively straightforward “stay at home” message to a more nuanced set of messages about a range of activities. Messaging may be complicated by differences across tiers that change over time and complicated still further if immunity or vaccination certificates provide exemptions for some people, for some activities.

Tiers? But Boris Johnson said we were going back to normal on the 21st June, why on earth would we need tiers? Because he’s a liar.

Another line in the document explains that another problem for the authorities in getting the British public to continue to comply with medical fascism is that “as perceptions of immunity grow, messaging may need to explain why continued adherence to specific protective measures is important”.

4. As perceptions of immunity grow, messaging may need to explain why continued adherence to specific protective measures is important [Moderate confidence]. The vaccination campaign has already successfully provided a first dose to more than 20% of UK adults [27]. Unless a good communication campaign is in place, vaccination may lead to lower adherence to protective behaviours in people who have been vaccinated [28] and, potentially, others in the population who perceive that there is no longer a major risk to vulnerable people [29] [28]. In addition, 16% of the

Why exactly will the British people need to continue to adhere to restrictions if they now have a miraculous experimental vaccine that will “save” them from Covid-19? After all the Health Secretary, Matt Hancock is constantly reminding us that “vaccination is our route back to normal”.

Well maybe the next part of the document can explain why, and it’s a card they have kept up their sleeve and are yet to really play, but we all know it is coming.

The document states that “17% of adults expect life to return to normal in six months or less. Modelling from SPI-M suggests this is optimistic. Additionally, the challenge of new variants may call for sudden, strict reimposition of measures”.

5. Expectations relating to the duration and changing nature of restrictions will need to be carefully managed [Moderate confidence]. Polling suggests that many members of the public believe that restrictions will be with us for some time. Ipsos MORI data suggest that 34% do not expect normality to return until 2022. Conversely, 26% expect life to return to normal by August 2021 [33]. The ONS Opinion and Lifestyle Survey identified 17% of adults who expect life to return to restrictions may help people to plan, improve their understanding of the efficacy of interventions and improve the perceived legitimacy of interventions.

If you thought life was going back to normal on the 21st June then think again, it's not in the script, quite the opposite is going to happen and we've just shown you the evidence in black and white.
